ABSTRACT

This program, included in "Effective Reading Programs...," serves 1,221 inmates of nine prison units of the Texas Department of Corrections. Students in the program are black, Spanish-speaking, or non-Spanish-speaking white adults. Students are released from their assigned industrial jobs for three hours each week to attend the laboratory for instruction in communication skills. When a student enters the program, he is given an oral reading test and other diagnostic tests to measure the highest level at which he can read without signs of difficulty. An individual lesson plan is then made for the student, and he is assigned activities in workbooks or state-adopted textbooks or with audiovisual equipment. The teacher usually works with students individually or in small groups of comparable ability, using large-group instruction only for discussions of current events or for showing a movie of general interest. Methods of teaching reading include a language experience approach, commercial programed materials, a kinesthetic approach, and a phonetic approach. (WR)

READING & BILINGUAL LABORATORY

THE READING-BILINGUAL LABORATORY

The reading-bilingual laboratory could be described basically as a center to meet the individual needs of the adult illiterate TDC inmate in communications skills.

The individual's ability is assessed through standardized and informal instruments. The non-English speaking inmate will be tested by the bilingual specialist or the bilingual instructor.

A lesson plan will then be prescribed,using an individualized approach, to meet individual needs.

The student will be taught as a single individual or will be placed in a small group with others of comparable ability. This means that the instructor should allow for flexible grouping, as the student may be placed in a different group in each area of communications instruction. The student's needs and progress should be continually evaluated.

The lab instructor should make a thorough study and evaluation of available materials. Without this information, a prescribed program of instruction cannot be identified for the student.

The bilingual specialists will be developing programs for the Spanish speaking students using materials and equipment such as the Language Master and Go books.

The intent of this guide is to identify a procedure to meet individual needs, to allow the instructor to prescribe for those needs, and to facilitate accurate record keeping.

GRAY ORAL READING TESTS
ADMINISTRATION

Please read carefully the directions for giving the tests in the manual of directions. Memorize and practice the directions for marking errors. Please consult the pronunciation key if there is any doubt concerning pronunciation in the difficult passages.

Please make arrangements for privacy during testing so the student will be under no undue tension.

Each time the student is tested, you will begin with the same passage number (although a different form) which was previously used. In other words, if the lowest passage read was number 4 on a pre-test, interim and posttests should begin with number 4.

This test does not assess comprehension, although it does include comprehension questions. For this reason, no allowance has been made on the examiner's recording sheet for comprehension responses. For diagnostic purposes, the classroom teacher may include these comprehension questions as part of the test.

Special consideration should be given cultural differences in language as there is a carry-over into reading. Do not count as errors any s which the student may add or omit from this test. Always mark this response for diagnostic purposes, but do not count as errors.

Do not count any dialect pronunciations as errors. You may mark this response. In fact, always mark ALL responses the student makes, but do not count dialect responses on the summary as errors. Some dialect sentences are underlined below.

He thought about it all day.
He throught about it all day.

They were here yesterday.
They was here yesterday.

There were people everywhere.
There were peoples everywhere.

He asked me the time.
He axed me the time.

The umpire called a strike.
The impire called a strike.

Did you hear the lion's roar?
Did you hear the lion's row?

The men went to work.
The mens went to work.

You are probably familiar with other dialect responses. This will be a judgmental factor in administering this test. In listening to the bilingual student read, listen for other dialect words. You may want to consult with the bilingual specialists in determining whether some words may be considered dialect.

The length of time between pre-tests, interim tests, and posttests will vary from unit to unit. The Lab instructor should request information from students concerning school enrollment, discharge, or transfer (if known) so interim or posttest records may be kept.

GRAY ORAL READING TE

RECORDING ERRORS

As each student reads, note carefully any errors he makes and record them on the Examiner's Record Booklet. The following legend is useful in making a continuing record of errors:

1. Examiner's aid: geologists - Repetition: A boy or A boy
2. Gross mispronunciation: traffic
3. Partial mispronunciation: Enclose part of word pronounced by examiner in underlined parentheses: regard
4. Wrong sound of letters or groups of letters: veins these
5. Omission of one or more elements: almost
6. Wrong syllabication: pierced almost laughed
7. Wrong accent: record instead of record
8. Inversion: on for no
9. Omission of a word or group of words: I saw a hungry dog.
10. Insertion of a word or group of words:
    He called his dog. (1 error)
11. Substitution of one meaningful word or several for others:
    Once upon a time a boy... (3 errors)
    A boy had a wagon. (1 error)
12. Note carefully and record any s the student adds or omits but do not count as errors. wants men
13. Note carefully and record dialect but do not count as errors.

SPELLING SURVEY

The spelling test may be administered as a group or individual test. To correspond with Gray's Reading Tests, the spelling forms are labeled A, B, C. This is simply for convenience in knowing which spelling form to administer.

The student should begin at a spelling level in which he misspells no words, or one word. He should discontinue the test at the level in which 5 of the 15 words are missed.

The word should be pronounced, used in a simple sentence that correctly defines the word, and pronounced again. The student should be told that NO words should be capitalized. The student should not begin writing the word until the examiner has finished speaking. Caution the student that some words may be homonyms and that he must always listen to the sentence before he begins writing the word.

The word is misspelled if the student adds an s or any suffix which has not been pronounced by the examiner.. Do NOT count as errors any words which he may have capitalized. Cursive writing is preferred, but accept manuscript. The word is correct if it is spelled correctly and can be read. If the student forms some letters incorrectly, then he has missed some words, even though he may be able to correctly spell these words orally.

There may be a range in a student's instructional level. The spelling level in which a student misses five words is not his instructional level. Please use the chart below to find the instructional level.

Independent level	100 93 87 80
Instructional:	73
Frustration:	67 and below

If a student misses five or more words on level one, then his instructional level is R (readiness). Examine his attempt to see if he knows any initial sounds, to plan his spelling readiness program.

If a student spells all levels of words correctly and then misses five or more on one level, then his instructional level would be the last level in which he spelled all words correctly, not the level in which he missed five or more words. If a student misses up to three words in each of the first two levels, then misses four words in the third level, his instructional level in spelling would be third level. If he also misses four words in the fourth level, his spelling range would be level 3-4. This means his spelling instruction would begin with difficult third level words and the student should progress easily into fourth level words.

PHONICS TEST

This informal diagnostic test will give you additional information about your student. The results of this test will be used to place the student in a phonics workbook and in planning a spelling program for him.

You may want to use the class record sheet to record phonics mastery. You could use plus and minus symbols in recording responses or use this sheet also for recording interim and posttests. By using this class record sheet, you may be able to tell at a glance how to group your students for instruction.

You should place on the student's lesson plan the workbook and page number for his beginning phonics lessons. Ordinarily, the student should be able to follow the sequence of phonics skills in the workbook. A sequence chart is given in each workbook. You will find review exercises that begin each workbook level. Some students may require intensive instruction in using these; other students may require only a quick drill.

Below are listed nine phonics rules. These may be taught as rules or as word patterns. Upon request, this office will furnish your unit with either a poster chart of these rules or poster strips.

1. A single vowel at the beginning or in the middle of a one-syllable word is usually short. EXAMPLES: end, hot These are closed syllables. A closed syllable ends with a consonant.

2. A single vowel at the end of a one-syllable word is usually long. EXAMPLES: go, me These are open syllables. An open syllable ends with a vowel.

3. A single vowel that is followed by a final e in a one-syllable word is usually long. EXAMPLES: lake, time

4. In words that contain two vowels together, usually the first is long and the second is silent. EXAMPLES: chain, groan

5. When a is followed by l, u, or w, it is usually pronounced the same way. EXAMPLES: also, caught, awful

6. When e, i, or u is followed by r, each is usually pronounced the same way. EXAMPLES: fertile, sir, curd

7. When a is followed by r, it is neither long nor short. EXAMPLES: cart, argue

8. A vowel followed by two consonants and a final e is usually short. EXAMPLES: hinge, dance

9. When c or g is followed by e, i, or y, both are usually soft. EXAMPLES: cent, city, cycle gem, gist, gym

You will note that these rules contain the word usually. The student must know that there are exceptions to these rules. Although a substantial body of research suggests that emphasis on the phonetic bases of English is a most productive way to teach beginning reading skills, in partially phonetic languages like English, the association of different sounds with a particular letter and different letters with a particular sound makes mastery of the sound-symbol relationship more difficult.

ALPHABET TEST

The principal means of gathering specific information is through testing. Do not assume that your student writes his name correctly and knows the alphabet. Test him. Ask him to write, not print, his full name at the top of the alphabet test. Check his name carefully for spelling and letter formation.

Although a quick-scoring alphabet test could be administered, with the student finding letters pronounced for him and circling them, you will gain more information about your student by requiring him to write the alphabet in sequence. Ask him to print the alphabet in upper-case letters, then the lower-case letters. Ask him to write the alphabet in upper-case letters, then the lower-case letters.

This test should give you information on the student's knowledge of alphabet sequence and correct formation of upper and lower-case letters. Every letter the student needs help with should be placed on his lesson plan and he should receive guidance in writing until mastery is obtained. If he does not know the sequence of the alphabet, the Language Master alphabet cards should be numbered, and some of his alphabet drill should be scheduled with this machine.

DOLCH BASIC WORDS

Phase I and some Phase II* students may be individually tested on the Dolch basic word list on the following pages. Use a plus or minus sign for their responses.

This word list may also be placed on the Language Master blank cards, using the same numbering as listed on these pages. Students will then select only those card numbers containing words they do not recognize.

When preparing blank cards for student use, attach tagboard strips with the prepared material on the strips so these cards may be reusable for another program, if so desired. In preparing material for Language Master cards, please use a base line so that students may always see the correct placement of letters on the line. Please see sample below. Please print letters accurately and carefully, with careful spacing, remembering that visual discrimination is of key importance. Students should have no difficulty in identifying one letter from another.

Upon request, this office will furnish the Dolch words printed on tagboard strips for use with Language Master cards. They may be attached with paper clips.

Dolch Basic Words
Translation by Oscar Gutierrez

SPELLING PROGRAM

The following page will supply Lab teachers with a form to use in giving weekly spelling tests. It may be used for 12 tests over a period of weeks. Of course your students will be grouped according to spelling ability, but as part of an individualized spelling program, the student may be given review tests using only the spelling word errors marked on his test sheet.

The student may be assigned more than ten words for study, but the instructor may select ten words at random for the spelling test.

The following pages also include a complete spelling word list from levels two through nine. It is recommended that a spelling program be followed as outlined in the adopted texts, but because of time limitations, a word list may be more convenient to use. In using a word list, the student may be given a copy of the list and assigned words from this list each week. The words should be orally pronounced and used in sentences. The student must understand the meaning of the word and should be given sentence exercises.

Beginning readers should not be given spelling assignments until they have a sight vocabulary and have mastered the alphabet. One source for their spelling program is the Dolch Puzzle Books.
